1, Delete provisions that undermine Canadians' rights and freedoms including:

// vague new offence which lumps dissent with violent extremism

// lower threshold for preventative detention, and

// CSIS power of disruption

2, Add effective provisions missing from C-51 by:

// strengthening existing oversight of security and intelligence agencies

// ensuring Canada adopts a system of parliamentary oversight that will work

// creating a community outreach and de-radicalization coordinator

// mandating a 3-year review of the legislation with a sunset clause

3, Limit the scope of the bill by:

// protecting privacy rights and narrowing the information sharing provision to cover only terrorism

// narrowing the grounds for listing individuals on no-fly lists and providing a better appeal process

“Witnesses from across the political spectrum told us this bill has serious, fundamental flaws”, said NDP Public Safety deputy critic Rosane Doré Lefebvre (Alfred—Pellan). “It’s not a matter of adding oversight and making a couple of tweaks – C-51 simply shouldn’t go forward”
